Art, human rights and social change

ECCHR fights globally for the enforcement of all human rights. Yet, our legal actions continually run up against their limitations. Together with cultural institutions and artists, we attempt to transcend these boundaries, to bring legibility to complex global issues, and to pose more fundamental, radical questions.

This interdisciplinary cooperation weaves together multiple perspectives, theory and practice, as well as the layered history of the struggle for human rights. In addition, art can provide a platform for those affected by injustice to make their voices heard—and to address conflicts collectively.

Since our founding, we have collaborated with committed artists and cultural producers to bring the necessary—also emotional—depth to our collective quest for justice and to visualize the dimensions of the pressing questions of our time.
